

ABN SENA

A magical story for children

1

In his cozy little lab, lived Abn Sena, a kind old scientist with a big, bushy white mustache and bright, curious eyes. He wore a blue coat with lots of pockets filled with colorful pencils and funny-looking tools. Today, something exciting was about to happen!

Abn Sena put on his goggles and smiled. He had beakers bubbling with pink and green goo! Numbers and shapes danced in his head, swirling like the sparkly dust on his workbench. He was ready to discover something amazing!

He carefully poured the pink goo into a glass triangle, then the green goo into a square one! "Hmm," he chuckled, stroking his white mustache. "What will happen when we add them together?"

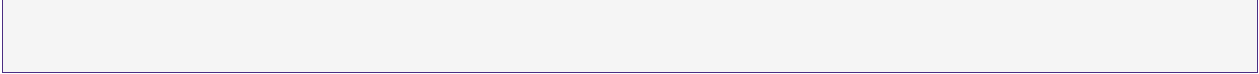

He mixed the goo with a long spoon. Suddenly, POP! A big, bouncy bubble floated up, shaped like a heart! Abn Sena clapped. "Hooray! Math and goo made a heart!"

The heart-bubble bounced around Abn Sena's lab, bumping gently against his blue coat. It giggled, a tiny, bubbly sound! Abn Sena laughed, his bright eyes twinkling. "It's a happy heart, made with math!"

The heart-bubble floated to Abn Sena's nose and gave it a gentle boop! He giggled and wiggled his mustache. "Now," he said, "Let's see if we can make a star!" He grabbed more goo, ready for another bubbly, math-filled adventure.
